VICIOUS MURDER IN THE HEART OF LITTLE ITALY.

ITALIAN MINER KILLED.

BEATEN INTO INSENSIBILITY, THES REPEATEDLY STABBED.

Nicolo Sabatino, of Frontenac, Kas. Found the Victim of an Assassin-An Italian and His Son Under Arrest Upon Suspicion.

The lifeless body of Nicola Sabatino, an Italian miner from Frontenac, Kas., was found yesterday morning in a blind alley in the rear of 511 East Third street. The mar had been murdered-a cruel, vicious murder. The entire left side of Sabatina's head had been cut and beaten in a shocking manner. Besides there was three sharp wounds in the left side of his neck, evidently made by a stilleto, each of which found the jugular vein with the precision of a

It had been made with the same Back of the ear was a small wound made evidently with the same instrument as the thrusts in the neck. Sabatina's body was found about (o'clock by Frank Spalata, a huckster, living upstairs, at 509 East Third street. He ad started out across the yard in the rear his house to a barn nearby to feed his ores. He almost stepped upon the body force he saw it. chief Hayes and Inspector Halpin, accompanied by Detectives McAnany, O'Flaherty and Bryant and several policemen, went to the scene. As a result of their investigation, Frank Bascone, an Italian laborer, living in a rear upstairs room at 511 East Third street, was placed under arrest at D. E. Smeltzer's commission house at 520 Walnut street, where he was cleaning celery. A trail of blood leading from the spot where Sabatino's body was found to the stairway leading to Bascone's room was found. There were blood spots on the floor of the room and upon the walls. The bed clothing was also spotted with blood. A broom behind the door was flecked with blood.

assere, was selling fruit, to notify him of his father's arrest. The boy, who is ly years old, burried uptown and was arrested at Fourth and Walnut streets. The police think the evidence points strongly toward Bascone and his son, as having bad a hand in the murder.

The elder Bascone, when questioned by Chief Hayes and Inspector Halpin, stated in very broken English that he knew nothing of Sabatino. Later he acknowledged that he had met him. The boy was shrewd in his answers. He accounted for the blood in the room by stating that he had tracked it there after looking at the body. When shown the bloody bed clothes he said the stains were due to bedbugs. The blood spots on the stairway leading to the Bascones' room had plainly dripped from a bloody object. The spots on the floor are the result of small pools of blood, which have been swept over with a broom or cloth. They have the appearance of having been tracked by a shoe, but as no bloody tracks are on the stairway, young Bascone's statement that he tracked the blood to the room is not believed. Blood stains upon his coat, he said, were due to a sore ear. The ear was not bloody.

Following out this theory the police believe Sabatino was lured into Bascone's apartiments, stricken down with a blow on the head and then carried downstairs to the spot where he was found. They argue that the deed was done about 1 o'clock Wednesday morning, as the body was cold when found and the blood, which had flowed in day morning, as the body was cold when found and the blood, which had flowed in a thick stream from the victim through the gate and into the back yard of the house at 511 East Third street, was stiff. A pile of resilend ties near the cate was stiff. at 511 East Third street, was stiff. A pile of railroad ties near the gate was sprinkled with blood, showing that some of the blows inflicted on Sabatino had been given after his body had been carried into the yard. No amount of questioning could induce the Italians in the vicinity of where the murder was committed to talk. None had heard a sound during the night, they claimed. One woman, Mrs. Myrtle Hodges, who lives near by, said she heard her dogs barking furiously about 1 o'clock, and got up and called them into the house. She heard no cries.

Sabatino had lost one hand, and was heard no cries. Sabatino had lost one hand, and was blind in the left eye. He was a small man, 55 years old, gray and bald. He was unmarried. The fact that no weapon beside the brick has been found has mystified the police. A knife was found on Bascone when he was searched at Central station, but it bore no blood stains. No trace has been found of Sabatino's missing clothing. Chief Hayes stated last night that he had information that an Italian boy had pawned a suit of clothing at a North end pawnshop, but it had not been located.

Sabatino had been known to Italians about Kansas City for six or seven years. He lost his hand and eye in a mine explosion at Pittsburg, Kas., two years ago, and since that time had worked as an engineer, superintending the hauling up and lowering of miners into the mines. Recently he lost his situation with the Midland Coal Company at Pittsburg, and moved to Frontenac. Joe Damico, the king of "Little Italy," stated yesterday that he knew Sabatino. "He always came to Kansas City during "He always came to Kansas City during Italy," stated yesterday that he knew Sabatino.

"He always came to Kansas City during the holidays and spent a month of two visiting," said Damico. "He generally had some money. I always considered him thrifty and not given to too much drink."

Sabatino arrived in Kansas City Monday from Frontenac. He did not display much money, but spent most of his time in the Italian saloons in the North end. Monday night he slept at the "Chicago" house, on Fourth street, between Oak and Locust streets. Monday evening he was at Frank Basile's saloon, at the southeast corner of Fifth and Cherry streets. He ate supper with Mr. Basile and family, who live over the saloon. He left the saloon about 8:10, according to Jo Bronne, Basile's bartender, going out the door on Fifth street. That was the last seen of him.

"I did not see Sabatino have any money," said Bronne, yesterday, "nor anyone leave the select with him. I suppose he left the said Bronne, yesterday, "nor anyone leave the saloon with him. I suppose he left the saloon and went north on Cherry street. "Last year he was here about this time and had plenty of money. I had never noticed that he had only one had never noticed that he had only one hand."

Schatina told Bronne that he had joined an Italian association at Pittsburg. The association was of a fraternal and not a political character.

Paul Boilean, who has a room in the vicinity of Fifth and Delaware streets, viewed the body of the murdered man at Stewart's morgue last evening and positively identified it as that of a man he met in a salcon at Fifth and Delaware, Monday night. He said that he was sure that he was not mistaken. He identified the stump of the left arm, the general features of the man's face, his hair and mustache. He said the man wore a "pepper and salt" suit of clothing, a brown soft hat, white shirt, square-toed shoes, and that he claimed to be an old soldier. He had a roll of bills and was spending his money freely. The stranger told Bollean that he "had an interest in some coal mines at Pittsburg, Kas."

interest in some coal mines at Pittsburg, Kas."

A. Abott, who with his family lives in the lower portion of the house at 5il East Third street, was questioned by the chief of police last night. He claimed he heard no noise during Tuesday night. He did not know Sabatino, and had never seen him. A squad of detectives searched his house last night with a hope of finding Sabatino's clothing, but were unsuccessful. They tramped about in the rain, looking into culverts and under porches, but found nothing. Mrs. Abott, who was sweeping her house when the police arrived yesterday morning, said she swept every day. She said young Bascone swept and took care of his father's apartments. Chief Hayes did not question Bascone or his son last night. He believes the boy had time to put up his story about the bedbugs and tracked blood while coming up from the stock yards. Chief Hayes thinks the motive for the killing of Sabatino was robbery.

At Eymann's saloon last night it was bery. A trail of blood leading from the spot where Sabatino's body was found to the stairway leading to Bascone's room was found. There were blood spots on the floor of the room and upon the walls. The bed clothing was also spotted with blood. A broom behind the door was flecked with blood.

A. Campana, a raloonkeeper at 415 East Third street, and a cousin of Bascone, learned of the latter's arrest. He hurried to the stock yards, where Bascone's son, Baldassere, was selling fruit, to notify him of his father's arrest. The boy, who is 14

AFTER-HARVEST FESTIVITIES. Proposed That There Shall Be Forty Shareholders in the New Association. The committee appointed to formulate plans for the new after-harvest festival association held its second meeting yes-terday afternoon at the rooms of the Karterday afternoon at the rooms of the Karnival Krewe, in the Keith & Perry building. It was decided there should be forty shareholders in the Karnival Krewe Association as it is to be reorganized. The twenty shareholders in the old association have agreed to turn their stock over to the shareholders of the new organization. The capital will remain the same, $2,000, but instead of each shareholder owning $100 of the stock, as in the original association, it will be distributed in blocks of $50.

The cash assets of the old Karnival Krewe amount to over $2,000, which will be turned over with the other assets of the old association to the new. The old shareholders will assign their stock to the new shareholders when the latter have been chosen.

holders will assign their stock to the new shareholders when the latter have been chosen.

The committee yesterday canvassed the names of public spirited men for shareholders, but, pending their acceptance of the positions, the names will not be announced. The twenty-five directors of the Krewe are to be selected from the forty shareholders. The committee will meet at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon for the purpose of electing directors.

The advertising matter issued by the new festival association will bear, after Kansas City Karnival Krewe, the words, "promoter of the After-Harvest Festivities," according to one of the members of the committee. The same committeeman said the name, Kansas City Karnival Krewe, was retained by the new association for two reasons, one being that it was considered one of the best names that could be selected, and the other, that all of the paraphernalia used in previous years and turned over by the old krewe to the new, bore the letters K. K. K. and it was a measure of economy to retain the old name.

Pain in His Lower Limbs After Being Paralyzed 23 Years.

Eugene Ewing, who has been at the Sister's hospital for the past three weeks be ing treated for paralysis of the lower limbs, was taken back to his home in Lexington yesterday, considerably improved. His physicians have hopes that he will eventually recover the use of his limbs. Mr. Ewing was shot twenty-three years ago by John Linn, at Lexington, whom he inetantly killed. Ewing was instantly paralyzed from his hips down and for twenty-three years has been able to move only his great toes. An operation was performed in Kansas City about three years after the shooting, but the builet was not located.

Mr. Ewing came to this city a few weeks ago and the builet was quickly located near the spine by the X rays and subsequently removed. Though he is able to move his great toes now, he experiences pain in his lower limbs, something he has not felt for twenty-three years. This is regarded as a very encouraging sign by the physician and they are confident. ed. His physicians have hopes that he will regarded as a very encouraging sign by his physicians and they are confident that he will slowly but surely improve until he eventually regains the use of his limbs.

the day at 8 o'clock last night when two rough looking men entered and, with drawn revolvers, ordered Mr. Smith to hold up his hands. Mr. Smith thought the men were fooling, as they wore no masks, and hesitated a moment before complying with the order. While he was trying to recall whether or not he had ever seen the men before, one of them moved up to him and struck him a stunning blow in the face with a "billy."

Mr. Smith was unable to gather himself under the blow and reeled against the counter. He was immediately pounced upon by the men and while one of them held him the other went through his pockets, securing from the inside vest pocket a wallet containing $240. The money was all in $20 bills, there being twelve of them, and as Mr. Smith felt the robber's hand in his pocket he made a last effort to resist. A second blow from the "billy" rendered him almost insensible, while the robbers carefully lowered him to the floor and backed out of the store with their revolvers still drawn. They cautioned ther victim about too much haste in notifying the police of their visit.

When Mr. Smith had recovered, he ran to the nearest telephone and notified the police at the Grand avenue station about the robbery. Detectives Shelby and Carroll were sent out on the case, but found no trace of the highwaymen. Mr. Smith was in his family apartments over the store when the detectives called and was able to give them a fairly good description of the men. One was about 30 years old, 5 feet 8 inches in height and weighed 150 pounds. He had a long scar on the left side of his nose. The other man was 20 years old, 5 feet 7 inches high and had a smooth face. The men were well dressed. Joseph W. Keezel, of 2520 Oak street, was stopped by two unmasked men on Eighteenth street between Baltimore avenue and Wyandotte street last evening at 6:15 and relieved of $4.50. The men wore no masks and were very politie in their dealings with Mr. Keezel. Rev. Dr. N. D. Hillis Delivers an Interesting Lecture at the Central High School.

Engiand, like all countries, is not alive to the greatness of its living, and for this man, as with others whose names are indelibly stamped upon the pages of history, we must look to the future for vindication. The next century will extend to the memory of this great man the homage that was his due while living."

Reviewing at great length the works of Ruskin, Dr. Hillis contended that all great inventions were but copies. The eye of the ox had suggested the telescope to Galileo; the microscope was conceived from the human eye, and even the hinge on our doors was suggested by the human arm.

"Man, said he, "thinks God's thoughts out after Him. From the crude savage sprung the towering intellects of Webster and Beecher, the patriotism of a Washington and a Lincoln. A long line of noted ancestry culminated in the mountain-towering greatness of Beecher, Webster, Washington, Lincoln and Ralph Emerson. In Culpepper county, Va., there was found a deed bearing the signature of a Lincoln, the photograph of which cannot be distinguished from that of the martyred president. Even the pacing horse, the palatable grape, and in fact all the excellence of to-day are but the natural result of heredity, Excellence to-day means a higher civilization and greater security for the human race in years to come. The next half century will witness in America the greatest outburst of genius the world has ever seen. In the past, Germany and the Old World countries furnished our historians and students, while we as a people have been busily engaged in the construction of cables, railways, telephone and telegraph lines. Now that machinery has given to every man slaves of steel, the opportunity is afforded for greater study and research."

research.

Dr. Hillis reviewed the great elements of change taking place to-day, all of which gave token of a rapidly approaching era of greatness.

His remarks throughout were a vindica-tion of Ruskin's line of thought and work.

Fargo was shot in the left breast just below the nipple, and the wound has been giving him some trouble. It is not considered dangerous, however, by the hospital physicians, and they ciaim with proper treatment he will be about in a few days.

After the visit of the White Caps Fargo was placed under the care of a local physician at Liberty, but worried a great deal lest the rioters should come again, and it was claimed this fact rendered it impossible for him to recover speedily. Rev. Mr. Rowen recommended that Fargo be brought to Kansas City for treatment and rest, and the suggestion was acted upon. and beaten in his own house, was brought Independence, Kas., Nov. 24.—(Special.) While it was generally understood that the quarantine against cattle from the Indian Territory and Texas was raised the 15th of this month, there seems to have been some complications about the matter which will probably be heard from later. The state law provides a heavy penalty for driving cattle across the line before December 1, but the rush began the 15th of this month and has kept up ever since. Still many herds are being held along the southern border for fear of vlolating the law and getting into serious trouble if they are brought across. It is these persons that are raising the objections to the other herds coming into this territory, and inquiring by whose authority the quarantine was raised contrary to law.

An answer has been received from Frank Weinshank, of Rochester, Kas., president of the state live stock sanitary commission in reply to a letter of inquiry which Weinshank, of Rochester, Kas., president of the state live stock sanitary commission, in reply to a letter of inquiry, which states that the commission was of the opinion that the Texas fever could be communicated after the 15th of November and for that reason it was thought advisable to order the quarantine raised at that date.
